

DC Healthcare Veteran Joins HPS

* DoBias Addition Enhances Client Service Offerings *

ALEXANDRIA, Va.--Feb. 6, 2017-- Health Policy Source, Inc. President Dan Boston announced today that Matt DoBias has joined the HPS team as a senior health policy analyst.

“Matt has had a front row seat in watching how health policy is shaped and crafted for more than a decade,” Boston said. “His ability to quickly and thoroughly analyze how new and existing policies impact the U.S. health sectors is a tremendous asset for us and the clients we serve.”

Matt joins HPS after a career in journalism and policy analysis, where he distinguished himself working for such publications as Modern Healthcare, National Journal and POLITICO. Most recently he served as Senior Manager in PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC’s) Health Research Institute. At PwC, he specialized in analyzing current and future policy trends that helped inform the business and operational decisions of hospital, health system and insurance industry executives.

In his new position, Matt will support efforts that ensure HPS clients continue to receive the guidance, strategy and advocacy they need as they navigate the shifting healthcare landscape.

“Now more than ever it’s important to cut through the clutter and deliver timely and accurate information about how legislative and regulatory changes may impact the industry,” DoBias said. “No one does this better than Health Policy Source.”

Matt studied journalism at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond, where he also served as a statehouse reporter. As a healthcare reporter, he has won awards for both investigative and service journalism reports. He has covered major pieces of legislation, such as the Medicare Modernization Act and the Affordable Care Act, as well as the intricate regulatory process that fleshed out both of those laws. He is a resident of Washington, D.C.
